CONCLUSIONS OF THE PEOPLE GLOBAL ACTION (PGA)
8th and 9th DECEMBER 2018 - MARRAKECH
The PGA constitutes an important and an autonomous space for dialogue and debates, in which co-exist-points of divergence, but also and foremost points of convergence. Associations, trade-unions and social movements met for two days in order to make a critical evaluation of the governments-led GFMD process (Global Forum on Migration and Development) and to lobby States, for them to establish migration and development policies based on human rights and in compliance with International Conventions.

This heterogeneity and diversity of the Civil society is a real strength and asset to advocate for the rights of migrants and to bring forward the work on migration.

This 2018 PGA edition held in Marrakech, on December 8th and 9th, took a particular turn this year as it coincided with the Adoption of the Global Compact for, so called, “Safe, Orderly and Regular Migration”. This raised a number of debates among PGA civil society members sharing sometimes very different points of view.

Let us recall the general context in which the Compact was discussed and adopted. First of all, around ten countries categorically rejected the Compact, often fed by populist movements that use a nationalist and xenophobic rhetoric. Those see in this Pact, an infringement to their sovereignty. These States, such as Poland, Italy, Hungary, Austria, the Czech Republic, the United States, Australia, Israel, etc., are hostile to welcome migrants and / or refugees and consider them as a danger for the security of their country. They see through the Compact agreement their very restrictive national policy being challenged.
This encounter allowed for several thematic and regional workshops to be held on:

- Migrants’ rights as rights for all
- Gender and Migration
- Social cohesion and belonging
- Migration and Development
- Migration and climate change
- They covered the majority of the world’s regions: Africa, Americas, Asia, Middle East and Europe

1. THEMATIC WORKSHOPS: SOME CONCLUSIONS

Some conclusions were highlighted by the participants during the thematic workshops:

- In one of the workshops, the idea that “migrants are in danger but not dangerous” was mentioned. States continue to militarise and to externalise their borders, endangering migrants’ life: thousands of lives were lost in the Mediterranean Sea, in the deserts of America and Africa as well as in the Mexico-US corridor. The Honduran caravan is one of the most recent example of it.
- States are deploying policies of refoulement, border closures, detention, mass expulsions, serious human rights violations, affecting more severely women and children, and sometimes even creating unacceptable situations such as slavery in Libya and workers’ exploitation.
- The legitimization of detention and detention centres, the criminalization of mobility put migrant people at risk as well as those who help them.
- Populist and extremist movements, which today are expanding all over Europe and in the United States, stigmatize migrants and tend to exacerbate xenophobia and racism through media or within their political discourse. These movements have a negative impact on migrants who are then ostracized, becoming scapegoats and victims of daily violence.
- Migration factors have taken various forms: economic and social factors such as lack of work, economic inequalities, social crises, poor governance, civil wars and more and more climate migration, that will affect mostly the poorest countries on the African and Asian continents. The so-called “refugee crisis”, which is in reality a “crisis of solidarity” and a “crisis of democracy”, recently grew in a strong way.
- As recalled in the workshop “Gender and migration”, women are more exposed to dangers than men with physical and sexual violence during their journey, exploitation at work, trafficking, health problems …
- Tensions are high on the issue of war refugees and climate refugees. Many examples were brought during workshops, including Rohingyas from Bangladesh; the Honduran caravan to the US through Mexico, Syrians towards Europe but more massively towards neighbouring countries (Lebanon, Turkey, Jordan); or the Palestinian refugee problem.
- The label “Sanctuary cities” was approved during the PGA.
- A concrete and important proposal was approved during the final plenary session in that regard. It is framed within a general recommendation in which it was reminded that the areas of intervention are important at all levels, from local to global. Thus, advocating for the internationalisation of these “Sanctuary cities” in Southern countries represents an innovative action. This label “Sanctuary cities” demonstrates that it is possible to propose human and solidarity centred solutions and alternatives to the “welcoming crisis” of migrants, refugees and asylum seekers.
2- REGIONAL WORKSHOPS: SOME RECOMMENDATIONS

Three strong recommendations were highlighted in the regional workshops:

• Freedom of movement and eliminating existing visa between African countries, along with local, regional and national actions to combat conflicts, economic crises, exploitation by multinationals, corruption and environmental issues. The workshop on Africa region draw attention on the Compact being more favourable towards the countries of the North than the South, marginalizing and stigmatizing African countries. It has been suggested to make use of African countries’ existing instruments enhancing a South-South cooperation.

• During the American regional workshop, it was recommended to work on a temporary protection status, that would include consular support for those who lost their status in the US, mainly people from Central America and Haiti. The problem of stateless people was also addressed.

• Within the Euro-Mediterranean workshop, it has been pointed out that beyond the forces of hatred and rejection of “the other” emerging and getting into power, we also witness the development of all forms of solidarity toward migrants in Europe. This capital of solidarity must be valued within an open approach that challenges the security centred views in order to reach a real Euro-Mediterranean pact that will involve both Northern and Southern countries. Several campaigns were proposed at regional level, including a regularisation campaign, a boycott of companies that support xenophobic parties and one against North-South mobility agreements.

3- THE GLOBAL COMPACT ON MIGRATION

The Global Compact on Migration took an important space during the debates, both in the plenary sessions and the workshops. It illustrates the importance that an international framework for the protection and regulation of migration should have. It also represents our diversity within the PGA, similar to the current civil society gathered in Marrakech: a committed civil society ready to exchange and debate despite divergent points of view.

Indeed, the Compact inspires diverse and opposed reactions.

Two schools of thoughts seem to emerge from this PGA debates:

• Some participants believe that the Compact is a minimum protection tool that provides a basic framework on Migration. It could nevertheless grant minimum protection to migrants and workers. It is a “Soft Compact” as it was often referred to during the plenary session. Civil society will always be able to review and to re-negotiate the Compact with the States.

• Others, reject the Compact. They denote the Compact on migration which they consider an agreement more security than protection centred, with a clear lack of ambition to guarantee a real protection of the Human Rights of migrants and their dignity. They also denounce a Compact that legitimises detention centres, including for children; that marginalises a certain number of Conventions, such as the International Convention on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Members of their Families; that reinforces the exchange of biometric data and that furthermore is not binding.

• However, beyond these differences, there is unanimity around the need to adopt a legal and political framework on migration, which would consolidate the International human rights reference framework. While basing it on the International Convention on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Members of their Families, it would strengthen the Convention and enlarge it towards the defence of the human rights of migrants which are rights for all.

- Beyond the Compact, the 2018 PGA in Marrakech, has been a key space for intense debates, rich exchanges, confrontation of diverse points of view as well as to confirm our struggles to access rights for all and re-

4- COMMON OBJECTIVES

Today, our common objectives lead us to think better and structure our struggles for:

- a legal framework that puts an end to the war on migration
- a Global Compact that protects the dignity and human rights of migrants
- equality men-women, and the inclusion of the gender dimension of migration in countries of origin, transit, destination and return
- free movement and installation for everyone
- the dignity and respect of migrants’ rights, in parallel with social justice and climate justice.
- democracy: equal rights for migrants that are more broadly included in the rights for all.
- a real sustainable, equitable and fair development that ensures the citizens’ well-being.

The PGA is going to monitor closely future migration policies. We propose that December 18th, the day for Migrant’s rights and March 21st, the International Day against Racism and Discriminations are dedicated to common and joint actions, citizen mobilisation and solidarity.

Few proposals raised during the debates have led to concrete proposals of actions:

- local, national, continental and global campaigns for the protection of the rights and dignity of migrants, for the respect and the improvement of international conventions.
- campaigns for a global Compact which protects the rights of migrants, against racism, discrimination, exclusion and xenophobia, and for their comprehensive integration.
- Development at national level of campaigns for “Sanctuary cities”. The adoption of the motion for “Sanctuary cities” is a concrete example of what we want to see widely achieved.
- A call was unanimously and strongly reiterated: Let’s get mobilized and act together to defend the human rights of migrants and refugees and let’s strengthen transnational struggles and solidarity.

The PGA Marrakech was not a simple discussion nor a political utopia for civil society but a space that we want more ambitious in terms of objectives for the protection of migrants. It is neither an outcome nor an end in itself! But a step towards a fairer, more equal and dignified world for migrants.
